Bishop Venerable Fulton J. Sheen

ON "TREASURES IN DARKNESS"

EXCERPT FROM "ON BEING HUMAN" – PART 1

The greatest tragedies in life are not altogether in what happens to people, but rather how they react to what happens to them...When Saint Paul was troubled with some misfortune, one know not what, and which he called a "thorn in his flesh," three times he prayed to have it removed. But the Lord answered him, "My strength finds its full scope in thy weakness." The suggestion is not that weaknesses and infirmities are to remain cherished. A child is not always to remain a child; a sick man should not remain weak when he should be strong. To be weak is to be miserable. But the weakness here in questions is that which inspires strength and courage to overcome it.

Every man has his weakness; it is in struggling against it that he becomes strong... When a man admits that he does not know everything, he exposes himself to the receiving of faith; he who confesses a moral weakness and craves for a grace and power outside of himself makes himself receive to grace and pardon.

The great ones of the earth have laid hold of some infirmity, and through it purchased strength. Raleigh wrote the History of the World in the Tower of London (a prison);...the Apocalypse of Saint John was written while he was in exile. Elizabeth Barrett Browning said that she was always in ill health, and yet, propped up in bed with cushions and with her books on all sides of her, she wrote love poetry the world will never forget...

"Adversity is the prosperity of the great." Instead of being cast down, noble souls, in adversity, rise to new heights...(to be continued next week.
