ON THE PHILOSOPHY OF CHARITY

EXCERPT FROM "OLD ERRORS AND NEW LABELS"

For us, the source of charity is not the will of men, but the will of God. The origin of charity lies not in effective human groupings but in divine life, and hence its development or unfolding is not horizontal, like the history of a human institution, which begins with men and ends with men, but vertical, beginning with God at its summit, and ending with man as its term. According to our philosophy, charity begins within the bosom of the Triune God, for charity is the definition of God. From out that infinite source, charity comes in a never-ending procession, reaching down to our own days. Because charity is naturally expansive and enthusiastic, God by a free act willed that others should share His Love, and so Omnipotence moved and said to nothingness, "Be"; eternity moved and said to time, "Begin"; Light moved and said to darkness, "Be light"—and lo! Living, palpitating things were seen moving among Eden's fourfold rivers. That life rebelled against its God, but charity could not keep the secret of its love, and the telling of the promise of better things was Revelation. God was emptying Himself. He revealed His power in His Creation, His plans in His Revelation, and now last of all, He reveals Himself, and the tiny a baby hands that clutched at straws and were not quite long enough to touch the huge heads of the cattle, were the hands of Charity Incarnate—Jesus Christ.

Animated Shorts Of The Week:

Finding Purpose and Why Doesn't God Just Show Himself?

These are excellent animated shorts that deliver their religious points in a straightforward and attainable approach through this unique animation that includes Scriptural quotes to connect the animation's message with the Bible. There are eight shorts in total—each one less than 7 minutes long. Share with your family—particularly middle school age and up. It opens up the conversation about God and Jesus' Teachings.
